BY

CAPTAIN C. F. MACKENZIE,

LATE OF H. M.'S CONSULAR SERVICE.

LONDON :

WM. H. ALLEN & CO., 13 WATERLOO PLACE.

PUBLISHED TO THE INDIA OFFICE.

1879.

“MAY Priscian himself be my enemy,” says Erasmus, “if what I am now going to say be not exactly true. I knew an old sophister that was a Grecian, a Latinist, a philosopher, a musician, and all to the utmost perfection, who, after three score years’ experience in the world, had spent the last twenty of them only in drudging to conquer the criticisms of Grammar; and made it the chief part of his prayers that his life might be so long spared till he had learned how rightly to distinguish betwixt the eight parts of speech, which no grammarian, whether Greek or Latin, had yet accurately done.”—From “The Praise of Folly.”

P R E F A C E.

Now that the island of Cyprus has virtually become a British colony—we say so boldly, because there is but small chance of Russia returning Kars or Batoum to the Sultán—it behoves Her Majesty's subjects to study the language of these Turks whose tongue is the predominant one in the "Levant" or Eastern Mediterranean. In bygone years the Venetians and Genoese were the only folk in Europe who traded to the East, and they have left their mark not only at Galata and other places, where their buildings still exist, but in the far-spread knowledge of the Italian tongue.

But the speech of those originally wild barbarians, the Osmánli Turks, which came with their own invading selves from the steppes of Central Asia, is still the master-tongue, especially in Anatolia (Anadole) or Asia Minor, where the genuine "Osmánli" is mainly to be found.

The Turks live amongst Greeks, Slavs, Armenians, and Arabs, whose language scarcely extends beyond themselves, wherever the Sultán's flag flies—but though with them, they are not of them, and to the end of time they will always be Turks—a dogged, a brave, a stubborn, and an honest race—misruled by evil Pachas, but still good men; and the object of this present “opuscule” is to enable our fellow countrymen to talk with them without the aid of those untrustworthy interpreters who are so prevalent in the Levant.

The Turkish language, and by this wording we imply the refined language of Istambúl or Constantinople, has wonderfully changed; the rough accent and speech of the Turkmáns has softened down even mincingly, and to any one who has the ability to master that great difficulty, their verb, euphony and elegance will be found in books.

But we have not to deal with books or with the literary Turkish—the Turks with whom our officers will have chiefly to deal are men who are very illiterate; perfection we have not, with so many distinguished predecessors, of whom the greatest, perhaps, is the venerable J. W. Redhouse; but we have striven to the best of our ability to place before the British public as briefly as possible, for their guidance amongst their future fellow subjects in the Levant, such Turkish as we ourselves picked up in the old Turkish Contingent, and therefore far from immaculate, or free from the hyper-criticism of “midnight-oil” linguists! The Turks, be they of Turkistán, of Persian Azérbaiján, of Anatolia, or Istámbúl, are, we think, Caucasians, and as such not to be confounded with the "Tatárs," or Tartars. Herdsmen, or little better, at first, they issued from those mid-plateaux of Asia which gave birth to so many previous invaders of the Western Land, and their steeds trode from China to Europe, southward to the Ganges and beyond it. As they rode on they overthrew effete empires and founded new ones in their places, leaving aside as they progressed some portion of their original absence of mental cultivation, forsaking idolatry for the creed of Muhammad, and after gathering fresh additions to their native speech from Arabs, Persians, and Greeks, they at last occupied the city of Constantine.

Their origin is a mystery, lost in bygone ages, and all the theories which have been started by the learned either of their own or of other nations are naught but flatulencies.

Confounded by the earliest known Muhammadan writer (Rashíd-ud-Dín) with the Mongols, and by subsequent scribes with the same race, we shall do little good and waste much time by following any of these so-called authorities; we purpose equally to omit Chinese and other authors—until in the year 1299 of the Christian era, Osmán, or Othmán, first invaded the territory of Nicomedia (now called "Ismid"). Orkhán, his son, won Broussá, the proposed place of refuge of the present Sultán should the Muscovites have expelled him from his capital in Europe.

Finally, Murád the First established himself in Thrace, from the Hellespont to Mount Hæmus, and in the Slav provinces between the Danube and the Adriatic. When "Bayazíd," or "Bajazet," succumbed before the rival forces of Amír Táímúr (or "Tamerlane"), the fortunes of the Osmánlís declined for a time, but the removal of the Tatár hordes, enabled them once more to follow that career of conquest which culminated in the taking of Constantinople.

It is asserted that the language of the Turkish race has ten dialects. With only one, the "Osmúnlí," have we to do, and he who speaks that well will find small difficulty in making himself understood by those who are speakers of the remaining nine.

The Sháh of Persia is a sort of Turk, and so was Sháh Nádír before him. From "El Misr," or Egypt, to Morocco; in Central Asia as far as Siberia; in many parts of Irán, or Persia; in Asia Minor, Syria, &c., Turkish will prove a passport to the understandings of the majority of the population.

The Turks have a very extensive historical and poetical literature, and as astronomers and philosophers they are at least on a level with the antique doctors of the Sorbonne, even when they have not Europeanized themselves at the "Ecole Polytechnique," or elsewhere in Christendom.

But for the debasing influence of Páshás who are not true Turks, but generally of that too-much vaunted Cir-cassian blood,—but for the seraglio influence of hidden but far-felt “odalisques,” whose favourites are promoted over the heads of those men of “Anadole” who form the real backbone and marrow of Turkey,—Turkey, under British control, might well hope to clear her Augean stable.

The writer of this is an old officer of Sir Robert Vivian’s Turkish Contingent, in Crimea, and has lived with Turks much since; he can safely aver that he never knew a Turk of rank who was not as unrighteous a speculator and debauchee as if he had been a “Chinovnik” of the Tzár, and that he cannot remember a “nefer,” or private of the Turks, who ever stole or lied after the fashion of the “Moskovs.”

In conclusion, let me say that after the French and German tongues had piloted a Briton to the shores of the Golden Horn, this language, of which I now advocate the utility, would carry him to the confines of China. We may, in the thorny and difficult task of transmuting the Turkish language into British characters, in many instances have made mistakes; but no one is infallible, and we trust that much mercy will be shown us, when so many doctors differ, and when the rules and regulations of orthography are so complicated, conflicting, and uncertain as they are in Turkish.

In a work of this description discrepancies are inevitable, let learned pandits say what they may; they are especially inseparable from a work in which the Turkish orthography is attempted to be transferred to the Roman character.

I admit my iniquity and am sorry for my sin, and I hope that severe critics will be merciful even if I have from time to time placed an 'en' as an 'u,' a 'd' as a 't,' a 'b' as a 'p,' a 'j' as a 'ch,' a 'Sághír nún' as a hard 'n,' and so on.

As with the works of my many abler predecessors, if the student makes himself thoroughly acquainted with my "lytel boke," he will be enabled, be it in Cyprus or on Ottoman ground, to approach perfection in one of the most difficult languages of the East.

TURKISH MANUAL.

THE Turks write and read from right to left, and begin their lines where we end them.

They have seven kinds of writing:—

The “Neskhí,” generally used in copies of the “Qurán.”

The “Diwání,” for matters of business; it slopes upwards, especially towards the end of the line.

The “Táalíq,” which differs but little from the “Neskhí,” and which is preferred by authors and poets.

The “Qirmah,” which also bears a resemblance to the “Táalíq,” and which is used in registers.

The “Suls,” for the titles of books and of imperial patents, &c.

The “Yáqútí” and the “Réhání,” which are so styled from the names of their inventors, but are seldom used.

The Turkish language possesses thirty-three letters, of which eight are borrowed from the Arabs and five from the Persians.

The Turkish pronunciation occupies a half-way place between that of the Persian and Arab tongues, that is to say, it is not as rude as the latter, whilst it is firmer and more virile than the other, except in Constantinople, where people speak as softly as Persians.

THE TURCO-ARABIC ALPHABET.

Shape.	Power.	Shape.	Power.	Shape.	Power.
ا	a, etc.	ر	r	ق	q
ب	b	ز	z	ك	k
پ	p	س	s	گ	g
ت	t	ش	sh	ن	nasal n
ث	s	س	s	ل	l
ج	j	ز	z	م	m
ح	ch	ت	t	ن	n
ه	h	ذ	z	و	v, w, o, ü,
خ	kh	'a, etc.	'a, etc.	و	eu, ú.*
د	d	غ	gh	ه	h
ذ	z	ف	f	ی	y, í

In general all the letters of the alphabet are consonants, because they cannot form a syllable without the aid of the accentuated vowels.

There are, nevertheless, three sorts of consonants, hard or guttural, the weak consonants, and the vowel-consonants.

The hard or guttural ones are: q, gh, 'a, t, ts, z, kh, h. They are so called because they are strongly aspirated and an effort of the throat, as ghú, khé, hé!

* As in French.

The weak consonants are z, r, ʒ, d, j, s, t, b, a, y, v (or w), n, m, k, l, f, sh, s.

The vowel-consonants are y, h (final), v (or w), a; and are so named because they are often employed as vowel-letters in order to facilitate the pronunciation of words; thus, Yárín for Yern.

OBSERVATIONS ON CERTAIN LETTERS OF THE ALPHABET.

‘A’ or ‘alif,’ although a consonant, always expresses a prolongation of sound, according to the letters which accompany it; as Al, ‘race,’ El, ‘hand,’ Hál, ‘state of things.’

This same letter followed immediately by ‘v,’ or ‘w’ (‘wáv’), or ‘y,’ is almost always employed as a diphthong, and takes the place of the accent-vowels in the beginning of words in ‘o,’ ‘w,’ ‘eu,’ ‘u,’ ‘y,’ or ‘í.’

The letter ‘b’ is pronounced as a ‘p,’ firstly, after the letter s, Isbát, ‘proof’; secondly, at the end of words, as in Qálip, ‘mould.’

‘T’ changes to ‘d,’ firstly, in the conjugation of the verbs: Ítmek, ‘to do,’ ‘to cut,’ Gitmek, ‘to go’; secondly, in the declension of the word Deurt, ‘four.’

‘Q’ (guttural) changes sometimes to ‘gh’ before a sound; thus, Sáriq, or ‘turban,’ becomes Sárighéh.

‘N’ before ‘b’ is pronounced ‘m’; as, Am (written n) bár, the chest, Pem (written n) búk, ‘cotton.’

The letter ‘h’ (ʔ) is mute or aspirated; it is mute when it is employed as a vowel at the end of words: let us call it the final ‘hé,’ whenever it is used as a vowel; it is aspirated at the beginning, and in the body of the words it is sometimes also, and at the end of words it is aspirated in Akrah, 'disgust,' Tshtéh, 'appetite,' Tshtibáh, 'doubt,' etc.

OF THE VOWEL-ACCENTS.

All the letters of the alphabet being looked upon as consonants, in order to form a syllable we must have recourse to the Hirkeh, 'motions,' or, as we call them, the vowel-accents or accent-vowels.

All letters of the alphabet being considered consonants, we must resort to the vowel-accents in order to form a syllable.

There are three vowel-accents in the Turkish language; viz.: (—) Üstün, (—) Üsréh, (—) Utürü.

(—) placed above a hard letter is pronounced 'á,' on a weak 'é.'

(—) placed beneath a hard letter expresses the sound 'e' under a feeble 'í.'

(—) placed on a hard letter forms the sounds 'o' 'ú'; on a weak one, 'eu,' 'ü.'

There are consequently eight voices, or vowels, of which four, 'á,' 'e,' 'o,' 'ú,' are hard; and four others, 'é,' 'í,' 'eu,' 'ü,' are weak.

The eight voices or vowels are divided into four classes, namely, 'á,' 'e' (first class); 'é,' 'í' (second class); 'o,' 'ú' (third class); and 'eu,' 'ü' (fourth class).

In the formation of the syllables, although it is not permitted to employ the vowels of different classes without distinction, nevertheless the third and the fourth classes sometimes borrow a vowel from the other classes.

The third class borrows 'a,' first vowel of the second class: as, Ot-ler, 'the herbs.'

The fourth class borrows 'é,' first vowel of the second class: as, Seuz-ler, 'the words.'

OF THE CLASSIFICATION OF WORDS.

The words of each class are distinguished by the sound of their last syllable.

The words which form their last syllable by the sounds 'a,' or 'e,' are of the first class: as, Tásh, 'a stone.' Nishán, 'mark,' Qárí, 'woman.'

The words of the first class may be recognized in reading—when a word composed of hard consonants forms its last syllable either by 'á,' or by 'y,' or 'í,' or by a final 'h': as, Sefá, 'rejoicing,' Arí, 'a bee,' Arqéh, 'the back'; when one can be sure that the final syllable of this word is accompanied by the vowel-accent (—): as, Sáqiz, 'mastic.' Khátir, 'memory.'

The words which form their last syllable by the vowels 'e,' or 'í,' are of the second class: as, Sil, 'a torrent.' Chíní, 'porcelain.'

In reading, one may recognize the words of the second class—firstly, when a word composed of weak consonants forms its last syllable either by 'y' (í), or a final 'h': as, Dísh, 'tooth,' Cháreh, 'remedy'; secondly, when one is sure that the final syllable of this word is accompanied by one of the vowel-accent (—) or (—): as, Defter, 'portfolio.'

The words which form their last syllable by the vowels 'o' or 'ú,' are of the third class: as, Yol, 'way,' Búíun, 'neck.'

In reading, the words of the third class are recognized—when a word composed of hard consonants forms its last syllable by ‘v’ or ‘w’ (Waw), or by ‘y’ (î): as, Qápú, ‘gate or door,’ Qúzî, ‘lamb’; when one sees that the last syllable is accompanied by the vowel-accent (‘-’): as, Furik, ‘very nice’; when in a word the letter ‘w’ or ‘v’ (Waw), being followed by a feeble consonant, expresses the sounds ‘o,’ ‘ú’: as, Búz, ‘in,’ Túí, ‘hair, feather.’

In reading, the words of the fourth class are recognized—when a word composed of feeble consonants forms its last syllable by the letter ‘w’ or ‘v’ (Waw): as, Güeul, ‘lake, or swamp’; when one is certain that its last syllable is accompanied by the vowel-accent (‘-’): as, Gütürüm, ‘maimed,’ Gümruk, ‘custom-house,’ Gül, ‘rose.’

RULE OF EUPHONY.—Waw, ‘y’ (î), at the end of words ought to represent the second vowel of the class to which this word belongs; so you must say Sáré, and not Sárî, ‘yellow.’

ORTHOGRAPHIC SIGNS.

There are four orthographic signs: (ـ) Tashdîd, (ـ) Mada, (ـ) Hamzeh, (ـ) Jazm.

The first doubles the force of the consonant on which it is placed.

The second expresses the hard sound ‘á.’

The third placed on ‘a’ (Alif) gives it the double sound of ‘é.’

The fourth placed over a letter indicates the suppression of the vowel-accent and terminates the syllable.

EXERCISES.

In the articulation of words, be careful to pronounce—

First, the sound of 'e' mute, with your teeth together: as, Eshq, 'light,' Qilej, 'sabre.'

Second, the letters 'sh' thus: Shéi, 'thing,' Yáshmak, 'woman's out-of-door robe,' Qásh, 'eyebrows.'

The aspirated 'h' pronounce in a perceptible manner in the body, and at the end of words: as, Ahmaq, 'imbecile,' Sháh, 'king.'

The letter 'j' (Jím) as with us: Jám, 'window,' Káj, 'hungry.'

'Ch' is also combined with 't,' and is sometimes pronounced 'tch' or 'tch' in such words as Tehám, 'a pine,' Achmaq, 'to open,' Qátech, 'how many?'

The 'gh,' by an effort of the throat: as, Gheiret, 'coinage,' Oghlán, 'boy,' Bágh, 'garden.'

'Kh,' is occasionally used as a strongly aspirated or double 'h,' but may be employed as a single one.

THE SUBSTANTIVE.

The substantives or nouns often vary in their terminations, and thus the declension is formed with its six cases, i.e. the nominative, genitive, dative, accusative, ablative, and commorative.

The nominative is the first word to be declined. It is the subject of the verb: as, Shehr mūhásireh íkén, 'the city being besieged.'

The genitive is formed from the nominative by the addition of the 'ñ' or Sághír nún. As this peculiar letter adds a syllable to the first word, the rules of euphony require that this syllable should be formed by the second vowel of the class to which this word belongs.

The dative is derived from the nominative by the addition of the letter 'h' (final), which is pronounced as 'á' in words of the first and second class, and as 'e' in those of the second and fourth. The dative is the indirect regimen which expresses a movement of tendency: as, Shehréh gídíyor, 'goes to the city.'

The accusative is derived from the nominative by the addition of the letter 'y' or 'í,' and is the direct regimen of verbs: as, Sheherí dúláshdüm.

The ablative is derived from the nominative by the addition of the particle 'dán' in the words of the first and third classes, and 'den' in those of the second and fourth. The ablative is the indirect regimen of verbs which express a movement of 'return,' or of 'extraction': as, Sheher-dán gélíyor, 'he comes from the city.'

The commorative is derived from the nominative by the addition of the particle 'déh,' pronounced 'dáh,' in the first and third classes of words, and 'déh' in the second and fourth; this case is the indirect regimen of those verbs which express no movement whatever: as, Iqámet Itdiq bir áíám shéhr déh.

OF THE FORMATION OF THE PLURAL.

In substantives, as in the other variable words, the plural is formed by adding the particle 'lar' or 'ler' to the singular; it is pronounced 'lar' in words of the first and third class, and 'ler' in the second and fourth.

In order to avoid the monotony of sounds which may be met with in polysyllabic words, this particle may be pronounced 'lér' after words of the first and third classes, and the particles 'dán' or 'déh,' etc.

There are four declensions according to the four classes of words, whether they end in a vowel or in a consonant.

The declensions of each class are distinguished by the genitive singular.

The first declension has the genitive singular ending in 'eñ,' as Ján-eñ, 'of the soul'; the second in 'iñ,' as Tan-iñ, 'of the body'; the third in 'úñ,' as Rúh-úñ, 'of the spirit'; the fourth in 'üñ,' as Gíün-üñ, 'of the day.'

FIRST DECLENSION.

Singular.	Plural.
Nom. Ján, 'the soul.'	Ján-ler.
Gen. Ján-eñ, 'of the soul.'	Ján-ler-iñ.
Dat. Ján-éh, 'to the soul.'	Ján-ler-éh.
Acc. Ján-í, 'the soul.'	Ján-ler-í, 'the souls.'
Abl. Ján-dán, 'from the soul.'	Ján-ler-dán, 'from the souls.'
Com. Ján-dáh, 'in the soul.'	Ján-ler-dáh, 'in the souls.'

Decline in the same way :—

Qán, 'blood.'	Qíl, 'horsehair.'
Qir, 'field.'	Yíl, 'year.'
Qísh, 'winter.'	Básh, 'head.'
Qár, 'snow.'	Yágh, 'oil.'
Yárl, 'bow.'	Qíz, 'girl.'

When the word to be declined is terminated by a vowel, according to a rule of euphony the 'n' is added between the final sound of the word and the Saghír nún of the genitive singular, and 'y' or 'í' between the final sound and the characteristic final 'h' and 'y' or 'í' of the dative and accusative of the same number.

Declension of a word ending in a vowel:—

Odáh, 'the room.'
 Odáh-neñ, 'of the room.'
 Odáh-yéh, 'to the room.'
 Odáh-yí, 'the room.'
 Odáh-dán, 'from the room.'
 Odáh-dáh, 'to the room.'

Decline in like manner:—

Adáh, 'an island.'	Qazá, 'misfortune.'
Yarah, 'rain.'	Qází, 'judge.'

The plural of words ending in a vowel is always declined in the same manner as those which terminate in a consonant.

SECOND DECLENSION.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	Tan, 'the body.'	Tan-ler, 'the bodies.'
Gen.	Tan-iñ, 'of the body.'	Tan-ler-iñ, 'of the bodies.'
Dat.	Tan-áh, 'to the body.'	Tan-ler-éh, 'to the bodies.'
Acc.	Tan-í, 'the body.'	Tan-ler-í, 'the bodies.'
Abl.	Tan-dán, 'from the body.'	Tan-ler-dán, 'from the bodies.'
Com.	Tan-dáh, 'in the body.'	Tan-ler-dáh, 'in the bodies.'

Decline in the same way :—

Dín, 'faith.'	Gil, 'clay.'
El, 'hand.'	Et, 'meat.'
Teréh, 'perspiration.'	Dil, 'tongue.'
Díz, 'knee.'

Words of the same class ending in a vowel :—

Nom.	Derí, 'the skin.'
Gen.	Derí-nín, 'of the skin.'
Dat.	Derí-yéh, 'to the skin.'
Acc.	Derí-yí, 'the skin.'
Abl.	Derí-dán, 'from the skin.'
Com.	Deri-déh, 'in the skin.'

Decline in like manner :—

Cháreh, 'means.'	Kédí, 'a cat,' etc.
------------------	---------------------

THIRD DECLENSION.

Singular.	Plural.
Nom. Rúh, 'the spirit.'	Rúh-ler, 'the spirits.'
Gen. Rúh-ún, 'of the spirit.'	Rúh-ún-ler, 'of the spirits.'
Dat. Rúh-éh, 'to the spirit.'	Rúh-ler-éh, 'to the spirits.'
Acc. Rúh-í, 'the spirit.'	Rúh-ler-í, 'the spirits.'
Abl. Rúh-dán, 'from the spirit.'	Rúh-ler-dán, 'from the spirits.'
Com. Rúh-dáh, 'in the spirit.'	Rúh-ler-dáh, 'in the spirits.'

Decline in like manner:—

Túz, 'salt.'	Qúl, 'slave.'	On, 'flour.'	Khurúsh, 'cock.'
Kúrd, 'wolf.'	Búz, 'ice.'	Múm, 'candle.'	Kúsh, 'bird.'

FOURTH DECLENSION.

Singular.

Plural.

Nom.	Gün, 'the day.'	Gün-ler, 'the days.'
Gen.	Gün-iñ, 'of the day.'	Gün-ler-iñ, 'of the days.'
Dat.	Gün-éh, 'to the day.'	Gün-ler-éh, 'to the days.'
Acc.	Gün-í, 'the day.'	Gün-ler-í, 'the days.'
Abl.	Gün-dán, 'from the day.'	Gün-ler-dán, 'from the days.'
Com.	Gün-dáh, 'in the day.'	Gün-ler-dáh, 'in the days.'

Words of the same class terminated by a vowel:—

Nom.	Súrí, 'a flock.'
Gen.	Súrí-niñ, 'of a flock.'
Dat.	Súrí-éh, 'to a flock.'
Acc.	Súrí-yí, 'the flock.'
Abl.	Súrí-dán, 'from the flock.'
Com.	Súrí-dáh, 'in the flock.'

Decline also in this way:—

Keuprí, 'bridge.'	Ulü, 'dead person.'
Qeutí, 'wicked person.'

It is to be remarked that if the word to be declined is terminated by the letters 'q' or 'k,' the former becomes 'gh,' whilst the latter is softened to a 'y' in the genitive, dative, and accusative of the singular. Monosyllables are, however, exceptions from this rule.

Words terminated by a 'q' or 'k':—

Heat.	The heart.
Nom. Tsíjiq.	Nom. Yürek.
Gen. Tsíjigh-iñ.	Gen. Yürey-iñ.
Dat. Tsíjigh-éh.	Dat. Yürey-éh.
Acc. Tsíjigh-í.	Acc. Yürey-í.
Abl. Tsíjiq-dán.	Abl. Yürek-dán.
Com. Tsíjiq-dáh.	Com. Yürek-dáh.

Nom. Sú-úq, 'the cold.' Gen. Sú-úghiñ, 'of the cold.'
Dat. Súríghéh. Acc. Sú-úghí. Abl. Sú-úq-dán. Com. Sú-úqdáh.

There is no exception in the case of the plural of these words. If the word terminated by 'q' or by 'k' is the infinitive of a word, these letters change to a final 'h,' and it is declined like a word ending in a vowel.

THE ADJECTIVE.

The adjective is invariably before the substantive, which it qualifies; it admits neither gender* nor number, and only agrees with the substantive where they both are primitive words.

Still an adjective of qualification may be declined; but it is then employed substantively.

* The word gender we do not use, everything in the Turkish language being in the neuter.

List of Adjectives most in use.

Achík, 'open'; Qabálí, 'heavy'; Khafíf, 'fine'; Qálin, 'heavy or gross'; Eulú, 'broad'; Tár, 'narrow'; Qúlái, 'short'; Ozún, 'difficult'; Kenj, 'young'; Khtíyár, 'old'; Güzel, 'beautiful'; Nádír, 'scarce'; Jirkín, 'ugly'; Bül, 'abundant.'

OF DETERMINATIVE ADJECTIVES.

There are five sorts of determinative adjectives: the numeral, the demonstrative, the possessive, the indefinite, and the distributive.

The numeral adjectives called 'cardinal,' express number; they are Bir, 'one,' Ikí, 'two,' Üch, 'three,' etc.

These adjectives ought never to agree as to number with the substantives they accompany, so that if the number is more than one, the substantive must be employed in the singular: thus, we should say, Üch Ser'askier (word for word 'three general-in-chief'), and not Üch Ser'-askier-ler ('three generals').

The numeral ordinal adjectives mark order and rank; these adjectives are derived from the cardinal numeral adjectives by the addition of the particle 'njí,' which is pronounced according to the rule of euphony: Yíghrmí, 'twenty'; Yíghrminjí, 'twentieth'; Yüz, 'hundred'; Yüzünjí, 'hundredth'; Bír, 'one'; Bírínjí, 'first.'

OF THE DEMONSTRATIVE ADJECTIVES.

The demonstrative adjectives determine the signification of the substantive by adding an idea of indication; these adjectives are Bú, Ishbú, Shú, Ol, O.

These adjectives also determine the proximity of the person or object which they indicate. Bú, Ishbú, indicate the nearest person or object; Shú, the object which comes after; and Ol, that which is furthest off, or which is absent: as, Bú evdáh, 'in that house'; Shú-kitáb, 'the book here'; Ol Beyzádcéh, 'the present gentleman.'

The demonstrative adjectives can be declined, but are then employed as demonstrative pronouns: as, Shú-ní baná vér, 'give me that'; Búniñ, 'what is that?' The adjective Ishbú, which is indeclinable, must be excepted: as, Ishbú bín íkí yüz yetmish senéh-sí, 'this year one thousand two hundred and seventy.'

EXERCISES;

Or, Application of the preceding Rules.

First Exercise.—Decline some words with their epithet, or with a qualification adjective.

Noun befitting a man, declined with its epithet:—

Singular.

Plural.

Nom.	Velí ul na'am efendí , 'a beneficent gentleman.'	Velí ul na'am efendí-ler , 'beneficent gentlemen.'
Gen.	Velí ul na'am efendí-niñ.	Velí ul na'am efendí-ler-iñ.
Dat.	Velí ul na'am efendí-éh.	Velí ul na'am efendí-ler-éh.
Acc.	Velí ul na'am efendí-yé.	Velí ul na'am efendí-ler-í.
Abl.	Velí ul na'am efendí-dán.	Velí ul na'am efendí-ler-dán.
Com.	Velí ul na'am efendí-dáh.	Velí ul na'am efendí-ler-dáh.

Noun suited to a woman, declined with its epithet:—

	Singular.	Plural.

POSSESSIVE ADJECTIVES.

There are two kinds of possessive adjectives, one indeclinable, the other used as an affix; the first precede the substantive, the others follow and are joined to it.

The possessive indeclinable adjectives are—Benim, 'mine'; Seniñ, 'thine'; Oniñ, 'his'; Bizim, 'ours'; Sizim, 'yours'; On-ler-în, 'theirs.'

These adjectives are generally employed with the substantive verb 'to be,' Benim dūr, 'it is mine,' &c.

The possessive affixed adjectives are—m, 'mine'; ñ, 'thine'; y, or í, 'his,' and sí, if the word ends in a vowel; ímiz, 'ours'; lerí, 'yours'; Sa'atem, 'my watch'; ism-iñ, 'thy name'; keif-iñiz, 'your health.'

The possessive adjective 'lerí' has no plural; it at the same time expresses the unity and the plurality of the word to which it is joined; thus Kitáb-lerí signifies 'their book' and 'his books.'

The possessive affixed adjectives m, 'my,' ñ, 'thine,' miz, 'ours,' ñiz, 'yours,' when joined to words terminating in either a consonant or a vowel, are always declined like a word which terminates in a consonant, which the exception of the plural number of which the characteristic 'ler' precedes the adjective affix; thus: Dost-em, 'my friend,' becomes Dost-ler-em, 'my friends,' in the plural number, and not Dost-em-ler.

The adjective affixes y or í, 'his,' lerí, 'theirs,' are declined differently, as will be seen further on.

The possessive affixed adjectives are syllables joined to the ends of words, and must consequently be pronounced in accordance with the rule of euphony.

So 'm' must be added to the end of a word of the first class if it is ended by a vowel, and 'em' if it terminates in a consonant, and so on with the others.

INDEFINITE ADJECTIVES.

The indefinite adjectives are Ba'az, 'some,' Choq, 'many,' Qanghí, 'which,' Hích bír, 'none,' Her, 'all,' Her-bír, 'each,' O, 'same,' Ba'azí dafá'ah, 'sometimes,' Ol ádam, 'the same man.'

DISTRIBUTIVE ADJECTIVES.

The distributive adjectives express an idea of rank, or of an equal division: as, Bír-ir, 'one to one' or 'one for each,' Íkí-shír, onlúq, 'of the value of ten.'

These adjectives derive from numbers; the first are formed by the addition of the characteristics 'r' and 'shir' if the number terminates in a vowel. The last adjectives are formed by adding the particle 'liq' or 'iñ,' according to the class of the word : as, Béshlük, 'of five,'

Yüzlük, 'of a hundred.'

EXERCISES.

Add a possessive adjective affix to the following words :—

Possessive adjective affixes joined to words of the four classes ending in a vowel or in a consonant.

Khwájéh-im, 'my professor.'	Ülülerí, 'their corpses.'
Dêdáh-iñ, 'your grandfather.'	Básh-em, 'my head.'
Kulkeh sí, 'his shadow.'	Parnaghîñ, 'thy finger.'
Qorqu-míz, 'our fear.'	Pederí, 'his father.'
Oljîñiz, 'your measure.'	Eumrinüz, 'our life.'
	Búyîñiz, 'Your waist.'
	Qol-lerí, 'their or his arms.'

Exercise.—Count from the number 'one,' to 'a million.'

Bír, 'one.'	Qirq deurt, 'forty-four.'
İkí, 'two.'	Ellí bésh, 'fifty-five.'
Üch, 'three.'	Altmish áltí, 'sixty-six.'
Deurt, 'four.'	Yétmish yedí, 'seventy-seven.'
Bésh, 'five.'	Seksán sekiz, 'eighty-eight.'
Áltí, 'six.'	Doqsán doquz, 'ninety-nine.'
Yedí, 'seven.'	Yüz, 'a hundred.'
Seqiz, 'eight.'	Bín, 'a thousand.'
Doqúz, 'nine.'	On bín, 'ten thousand.'
On, 'ten.'	Yüz-bín, 'hundred thousand.'
On-bír, 'eleven.'
Yighrmí ikí, 'twenty-two.'
Otúz üch, 'thirty-three.'

Mîlîún, 'a million.'

DETERMINATIVE AFFIX.

In the Turkish language the possessive adjective 'y' or 'í' is almost always used as articles are with us; its function is to join itself to the end of substantives in order to designate that they are employed in a determined sense. We shall designate this adjective when employed in this sense 'a determinative affix,' or simply 'the affix': as, Elmá ághájí, 'apple-tree,' or 'tree of apple.'

The words terminated by the determinative affix are declined as follows, and the affix 'y' or 'í' changes to 'n' from the genitive to the commorative of the two numbers.

Declension of the affix 'y' or 'í' joined to words ending in a consonant or in a vowel:—

The Tree.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	Aghájí.	Agháj-lerí.
Gen.	Aghájí-niñ.	Aghájlerí-niñ.
Dat.	Agháji-néh.	Aghájlerí-néh.
Acc.	Agháji-ní.	Agháilerí-ní.
Abl.	Aghájin-dán.	Aghájlerin-dán.
Com.	Aghájin-dáh.	Aghájlerin-dáh.

The Master.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	Aghá-sí.	Aghálerí.
Gen.	Aghá-siniñ.	Aghálerí-niñ.
Dat.	Aghá-siné.	Aghálerí-néh.
Acc.	Aghá-siní.	Aghálerí-ní.
Abl.	Aghá-sin-dán.	Aghálerin-dán.
Com.	Aghá-sin-dáh.	Aghálerin-dáh.

EXERCISES.

Translate into the Turkish language the following:—
 ‘The gate of city,’ ‘gunpowder.’

The order of these words must always be inverted; the complement—that is to say, the substantive which completes the idea commenced by another—must be placed first, and the affix must then be added to the end of that of which the sense is completed. These words ought, therefore, to be turned thus: for ‘gate of city,’ ‘of city the gate,’ Sheherin Qápúsí; Top-bárútí, ‘gunpowder.’

Decline the following words:—Búghchéh Adáh-sí, ‘is e of Tenedos,’ Ayá súfiéh Já’má-sí, ‘the mosque of Saint Sophia.’

THE PRONOUN.

There are five sorts of pronouns, the personal pronouns, the demonstrative pronouns, the possessive pronouns, and the indefinite pronouns.

Of the Personal Pronouns.

The personal pronouns are: Ben, ‘I,’ Sen, ‘thou,’ O, ‘he,’ Kendí or Kendísí, ‘himself.’

Declension of the Personal Pronouns:—

Singular.	Plural.
Nom. Ben , ‘I.’	Biz , ‘we’ or ‘us.’
Gen. Benim , ‘of me.’	Bizim , ‘of us.’
Dat. Bañá , ‘to me.’	Biz-éh , ‘to us.’
Acc. Bení , ‘me.’	Bizí , ‘us.’
Abl. Ben-dán , ‘from me.’	Biz-dán , ‘from us.’
Com. Ben-dáh , ‘in me.’	Biz-dáh , ‘in us.’

Singular.	Plural.
Nom. Sen, 'thou, thee.'	Siz, 'you.'
Gen. Seniñ, 'of thee.'	Siziñ, 'of you.'
Dat. Señá, 'to thee.'	Sizéh, 'to you.'
Acc. Sení, 'thee.'	Sizí, 'you.'
Abl. Sen-dán, 'from thee.'	Siz-dán, 'from you.'
Com. Sen-dáh, 'in thee.'	Siz-dáh, 'in you.'
Nom. O, 'he, him.'	An-ler, 'they.'
Gen. Oniñ, 'of him.'	Anleriñ, 'of them.'
Dat. Oná, 'to him.'	Anleréh, 'to them.'
Acc. Oní, 'him.'	Anlerí, 'them.'
Abl. On-dán, 'from him.'	An-ler-dán, 'from them.'
Com. On-dáh, 'in him.'	An-ler-dáh, 'in you.'

Of the Demonstrative Pronouns.

The demonstrative pronouns are: Bú, 'this,' Shú, 'that.' These pronouns are declined like the personal pronoun of the third person, O, 'he.'

These pronouns are always employed interrogatively; the two first are declined in the second declension, and the two last according to that of the affix 'y' or 'í': as, Qághí siní álír-sen.

Of the Relative Pronouns.

The relative pronouns are Kîm, 'who?' Néh, 'what?' Qághí sí, 'which?' Kí, 'who?'

These pronouns are always employed interrogatively; the two first are declined on the plan of the second declension, and the two last according to that of the affix 'y' or 'í': as, Qághí siní álír-sen, 'which will you take?'

The relative pronoun Keh is indeclinable when employed alone, and is only declined when joined to the end of words: as, 'Yúqáridáh, 'on high,' makes Yúqáridáhkí, or 'that which was on high'; El im in kí qelem, 'the pen I have in my hand,' or, word for word, 'hand mine in which pen.'

Of the Possessive Pronouns.

The relative pronoun Kí joined to the end of indeclinable possessive adjectives forms the possessive pronouns; it is thus that Benim makes Benim-kí, 'mine,' Sizin, 'yours,' makes 'Sizin-kí, 'your own,' etc.

Of the Indefinite Pronouns.

The indefinite pronouns are Her-kím, 'whoever,' Her-kish, 'all,' Her-bír, 'each one,' Kimísch, 'no one.' The indefinite adjectives joined to the affix 'y' or 'í' also take the place of the indefinite pronouns Díyüler keh ba'azílerí, 'some people say that.'

THE VERB.

The verb is a word which expresses the affirmation; properly there is but one verb in the Turkish language—the substantive verb Im, 'I am'; the other verbs, known as adjective, can only have the form of a verb when they are joined to the substantive verb. The verb 'I love' is, in Turkish, Sevérim; the word Sever has only the form of a verb because it is joined to the verb Im.

On the Modifications of the Verb.

There are four moods—the indicative, the imperative, the subjunctive, and the infinitive.*

There are two sorts of tenses—the simple and the conditional.

The tense is simple when the verb presents itself under the form which is proper to it, İm, 'I am.'

It is conditional when it is joined to the conjunction Sî, İsîhim.

The past tense is determinate or indeterminate.

The determinate past recalls to the memory the time of the actions, and expresses the affirmation in a manner which is certain and still present to the mind: as, Dün güeurdüm, 'I saw him yesterday.'

The indeterminate past expresses the affirmation in a vague and uncertain manner: as, Güeurmish-îm, 'I should have seen him.'

The plural of the third person of verbs is formed by adding 'ler' to the singular, but the plural of the first and second persons is formed as follows:—The letter 'm,' which is the ordinary desinence or termination of the first person of the verbs is changed to 'z'; İm, 'I am,' makes İz, 'we are'; whilst the second person adds this same letter to its termination: Sin, 'thou art,' makes Sîñiz, 'you are.' Nevertheless, when the verb is of a past or imperfect tense the characteristic 'z' changes in its turn to 'q' or

* Some tenses of verbs in the Turkish language seem to express a doubt, a desire, or an absolute necessity; we do not think it necessary to create dubitative, optative, necessitative moods, etc., as others have done.

'k' for the first person of the plural: as, İdüm, 'I was,' İdüğ, 'we were.'

Of the Substantive Verb.

The substantive verb İm, 'I am,' being defective, has only the following tenses:—First, the present of the indicative; second, the determinate imperfect; third, the indeterminate past; fourth, the present with the conjunction Sî, which we style the conditional tense; fifth, the third person of the singular and the three of the plural of the imperative; sixth, the present participle; seventh, the indeclinable past participle; eighth, the declinable past participle; lastly, the gerund in 'B.'

Each person of the tenses of the substantive verb serves to distinguish the number and the person of the other verbs as as many syllables which end them, and consequently they ought all to be pronounced according to the rule of euphony, which is that 'w' and 'y' or 'î' at the end of words represent the second vowel of the class to which these words belong.

CONJUGATION OF THE SUBSTANTIVE VERB.

Pronounced according to the rules of euphony.

Indicative.

Present.

İm-îm, 'I am.'

Sîñ, 'thou art.'

Dir, or dür, 'he is.'

İz-îz, 'we are.'

Sîñiz, 'you are.'

Dir-lér, or Ler-dir, 'they are.'

Yâshlû-îm, 'I am old.'

Kenj-sîñ, 'thou art young.'

Châjuğ-dir, 'he is a child.'

Khastêh-îz, 'we are ill.'

İyü-sîñiz, 'you are well.'

Sîhet bûlmağdâh dir-lér,
'they are getting well.'

Determinate Imperfect.

Ɛdim, 'I was.'	Kefíl-ídím, 'I became security.'
Ɛdiñ, 'thou wert.'	Sháhíd-ídím, 'I was witness.'
Ɛdí, 'he was.'	Mahbús-ídí, 'he was imprisoned.'
Ɛdiñ, 'we were.'	Vékíl-ídíñ, 'we were his deputies.'
Ɛdí-íniz, 'you were.'	Hákímí-ídíniz, 'you were his judge.'
Ɛdí-lér-dé, 'they were.'	Ɛdí-lér khasim-lérí, 'they were his adversaries.'

Or by the contraction Dem.

Imperfect and Indeterminate Past.

Ɛshem, 'I was.'	Júmerd-íshem, 'I was or have been generous.'
Ɛmish-sen, 'thou wert.'	Bakhtlū-ímish-sen, 'thou hast been fortunate.'
Ɛmish, 'he was.'	Faqr-ímish, 'he became poor.'
Ɛmish-iz, 'we were.'	Zengín-ímish-iz, 'we were rich.'
Ɛmish-siñiz, 'you were.'	Fúqrá-ímish-siñiz, 'you were poor folk.'

Conditional Tense.

İséhîm, 'if I am prudent.'	A'akellî-îshéhîm.
İséhîñ, 'if thou art.'	Eshek-îséh-ñ, 'if you are an ass.'
İséh, 'if he is.'	Dilî-îséh, 'if he is mad.'
İséhîñ, 'if we are.'	Kheir-lî-îséh, 'if we are favourable.'
İséh-ñiz, 'if you are.'	Khúshnúd-îséh-ñiz, 'if you are satisfied.'
İséh, 'if they are.'	Erbábî-îséh-ler, 'if they are capable.'

Imperative.

Sún, 'that it may be'; İim, -h (final), 'let us be'; İñ, ñ, 'be'; Sún-lér, 'that they be.'

PARTICIPLES.

Present.

Ken-îkén, 'being, whilst he was.'

Declinable Past.

İdîñ ídûq, 'been, or that he had been'; Diñ, Diq, Diñ, Diq.

Indeclinable Past.

İmish, 'been'; Mish, 'having been.'

GERUND.

Ūb, b, eub, p; thus the negative verb Déyil-ím, 'I am not,' makes Rahet-déyilím (sometimes written by me, D'eíl).

Observations on the Substantive Verb.

The tenses which are wanting to the substantive verb must be made up by those of the verb Olmaq, 'to make or become.'

OF THE ADJECTIVE-VERBS.

We call an adjective-verb that which reunites the verb 'to be,' and a quality which has relation to an action or a state; such are the verbs Sévérim, 'I am loving'; Yázárim, 'I am writing.'

The indeclinable participles which serve to conjugate the verbs are :—

For the present tense: Yázímür, 'who is now writing'; Yázár, 'who habitually writes.'

For the past tense: Yáznish, 'who has written.'

For the future tense: Yázéh-jeq, 'he will write'; Yáz-mélí, 'he must write'; Yázéh, 'so that he may write.'

These participles joined to the tenses of the substantive verb form the entire course of a conjugation.

Of the Tenses of Adjective-Verbs.

The indicative has two presents: the actual present and the indefinite present.

The actual present expresses the affirmation as taking place at the moment of speech : as, Yázıorım, ‘I am just writing.’

The indefinite present expresses the action, or habitual situation, of the subject : as, Mévéh-yí-pék sévér, ‘he is very fond of fruit’; Enfiyyéh Qúllánmaz, ‘he does not take snuff.’

This tense may also be called the indefinite future.

There are four conjugations according to the four classes of words, which are distinguished one from the other by their root and by the indefinite present of the indicative.

The first conjugation of the indefinite present of the indicative ends in ‘em’ : as, Yázárém, ‘I write’; the second, in ‘im’ : as, İdírim, ‘I do’; the third, in ‘úm’ : as, Olúrúm, ‘I do myself’; the fourth, in ‘üm’ : as, Güeurürüm, ‘I see.’

MODELS OF CONJUGATIONS.

FIRST CONJUGATION, IN ‘EM.’

Indicative.

Present.

Yázıorım, ‘I am writing.’
Yázıorsén, ‘thou writest.’

Yázıorız, ‘we are writing.’
Yázıorsınıız, ‘you are writing.’

Yázıor, ‘he is writing.’

Yázıor-lér, ‘they are writing.’

Imperfect.

Yázíoridem, 'I was writing.'	Yázíorídiq, 'we were writing.'
Yázíorídīn, 'thou wert writing.'	Yázíorídīniz, 'you were writing.'
Yázíorídí, 'he was writing.'	Yázíorídíler, 'they were writing.'

Indefinite Present.

Yázárim, 'I will write.'	Yázáriz, 'we will write.'
Yázársen, 'thou wilt write.'	Yázársīniz, 'you will write.'
Yázár, 'he will write.'	Yázárlér, 'they will write.'

Determinate Imperfect.

Yázár-idim, 'I would write.'	Yázár-ídiq, 'we would write.'
Yázár-ídīn, 'thou wouldst write.'	Yázár-ídīniz, 'you would write.'
Yázár-ídí, 'he would write.'	Yázár-ídí-lér, 'they would write.'

Determinate Past.

Yázdim, 'I have written.'	Yázdiq, 'we have written.'
Yázdīn, 'thou hast written.'	Yázdīniz, 'you have written.'
Yázdí, 'he has written.'	Yázdíler, 'they have written.'

Indeterminate Past.

Yázmish-em, 'probably I have written.'
 Yázmish-sen, 'probably thou hast written.'
 Yázmish-dir, 'probably he has written.'
 Yázmish-iz, 'probably we have written.'
 Yázmishiniz, 'probably you have written.'
 Yázmishlér, 'probably they have written.'

Also they say—

Yázdíghem-wár, 'I have sometimes written.'
 Yázdíghen-wár, 'thou hast sometimes written.'
 Yázdíghí-wár, 'he has sometimes written.'
 Yázdíghimiz-wár, 'we have sometimes written.'
 Yázdíghiniz-wár, 'you have sometimes written.'

Pluperfect.

Yázmish-ídim, 'I had written.'
 Yázmish-ídiñ, 'thou hadst written.'
 Yázmish-ídí, 'he had written.'
 Yázmish-ídeq, 'we had written.'
 Yázmish-ídíler, 'they had written.'

Definite Future.

Yázéh-jéghim, 'I ought, or am going, to write.'
 Yázéh-jeqsen, 'thou shouldst write.'
 Yázéh-jeq-dír, 'he ought to write.'
 Yázéh-jéghiz, 'you should write.'

Absolute Future.

Yázmélí-ím, 'I must write.'	Yázmélí-iz, 'we must write.'
Yázmélí-sen, 'thou must write.'	Yázmélí-siñiz, 'you must write.'
Yázmélí-dír, 'he must write.'	Yázmélí-dír-ler, 'they must write.'

Conditional Tenses.

Yázíor-iséh-im, 'if I actually write.'
Yázíoríséh-iñ, 'if thou writest habitually.'
Yázdí-íséh, 'if he has certainly written.'
Yázmish-rá-iséq, 'if we had sometimes written.'
Yázéh-jek-íséh-ñiz, 'if you ought to write.'
Yázmélí-íséh-ler, 'if they ought to write.'

Imperative.

No first person.	Yáz'h-lim, 'let us write.'
Yáz, 'write.'	Yázíñiz, 'write.'
Yázsün, 'let him write.'	Yázsünler, 'let them write.'

N.B.—In this work the 'ü' has often been changed to an 'i,' as few people can distinguish the difference.

Subjunctive.Present, or Future.

Yázéh-ún, 'that I write.'	Yázéh-lém, 'that we write.'
Yázéh-sen, 'that thou write.'	Yázéh-siñiz, 'that you write.'
Yázéh, 'that he write.'	Yázéh-lér, 'that they write.'

Second Conditional Tense.

Yáz-síh-dem, 'if I write.'	Yáz-eq, 'if we write.'
Yáz-síh-în, 'if thou writest.'	Yáz-síh-ñiz, 'if you write.'
Yáz-síh, 'if he writes.'	Yáz-síh-lér, 'if they write.'

Infinitive.

Yázmáq, 'to write.'

PARTICIPLES.

Declinable Present.

Yázár, 'writing,' 'who was writing,' 'who has or who had written.'

Indeclinable Present.

Yázár, Yázíor, 'who writes.'

Declinable Past.

Yázdiq, 'writes,' 'that which he has or which he had written.'

Indeclinable Past.

Yázmish, 'written,' 'having written.'

Declinable Future.

Yázéh-jéq, 'ought to write.'

Indeclinable Future.

Yázmélí, 'He must write, as he ought to do so.'

Thus are conjugated :—

Arámaq, 'to seek.'	Kálqmaq, 'to rise.'
Achmaq, 'to open.'	Kírmeq, 'to break.'
Atlámaq, 'to jump.'	Ísirmeq, 'to bite.'
Átmaq, 'to throw.'	Yákmaq, 'to burn.'
Írmeq, 'to separate.'	Yápmaq, 'to make.'
Baqmaq, 'to look.'	Chálmaq, 'to steal.'
Basmaq, 'to trample.'

The personal pronouns Ben or Sen, etc., ought not to be employed in the conjugation of the verbs, as the verb-substantive alone should serve to distinguish the number and the persons of the other verbs. Nor does custom allow the verb Dir to be expressed after the indeclinable present participles : so Yázíor is put instead of Yázíor-dir.

SUPPLEMENT.

FOR VERBS FORMED BY HARD VOWELS.

Tenses of the Verbs least used.Pluperfect.

Yázdíghim-wár-ídí, 'I had (sometimes) written.'
 Yázdíghĩn-wár-ídí, 'thou hadst written.'
 Yázdíghĩ-wár-ídí, 'he had written.'
 Yázdíghimiz-wár-ídí, 'we had written.'
 Yázdíghĩniz-wár-ídí, 'you had written.'
 Yázdiq-lerĩ-wár-ídí, 'they had written.'

Imperfect of the Definite Future.

Yázéh-jeq-ídim, 'I ought to write.'
 Yázéh-jeq-ídiñ, 'thou oughtest to write.'
 Yázéh-jeq-ídí, 'he ought to write.'
 Yázéh-jeq-ídíq, 'we ought to write.'
 Yázéh-jeq-ídiñiz, 'you ought to write.'
 Yázéh-jeq-ídí-lér, 'they ought to write.'

Imperfect of the Absolute Future.

Yáz-mélí-ídim, 'it was necessary I should write.'
 Yáz-mélí-idiñ, 'it was necessary thou shouldst write.'
 Yáz-mélí-ídí, 'it was necessary he should write.'
 Yáz-mélí-ídik, 'it was necessary we should write.'
 Yáz-mélí-ídiñiz, 'it was necessary you should write.'
 Yáz-mélí-ídí-lér, 'it was necessary they should write.'

Conditional Past Tense.

Yázdíghim-olsáh, 'if I have or had written.'
 Yázdíghĩn-olsáh, 'if thou hadst written.'
 Yázdíghĩ-olsáh, 'if he had written.'
 Yázdíghimiz-olsáh, 'if we had written.'
 Yázdíghĩniz-olsáh, 'if you had written.'
 Yázdíqlerĩ-olsáh, 'if they have written.'

Other expressions are—

Yázmish-olsáhim, 'if I have written.'
 Yázmish-olsáhiñ, 'if thou hast written.'
 Yázmish-olsáh, 'if he has written.'
 Yázmish-olsúq, 'if we have written.'
 Yázmish-olsáhñiz, 'if you have written.'
 Yázmish-olsáh-lér, 'if they have written.'

Imperfect of the Subjunctive.

Yázéh-ídim, 'that I should write.'
 Yázéh-ídiñ, 'that thou shouldst write.'
 Yázéh-ídí, 'that he should write.'
 Yázéh-ídiq, 'that we should write.'
 Yázéh-ídiñiz, 'that you should write.'
 Yázéh-ídí-lér, 'that they should write.'

GERUNDS.

Derived directly from the root Yázinjéh, 'when one writes.'

Derived from the declinable past-participle Yázdiqlín, 'as soon as he has written'; Yázdiqjéh, 'every time he wrote or has written.'

Derived from present and future participles, Yázár-ken, Yázíor-ken, 'at the time he was writing'; Yazéh-jeq, or Yázmélí-ískén, 'when one ought to write.'

Derived from the present of the subjunctive Yázéh, 'in writing'; Yázéh-yazéh, 'whilst writing'; Yázéh-lí, 'since he has written.'

Derived from the present of the infinitive Yázméghín, 'having written'; Yázmeq-dáh, 'in the writing'; Yázmeqléh, 'in writing.'

SECOND CONJUGATION IN 'IM.'

Indicative.Present.

Idíorim, 'I am (actually) doing.'	Idíoríz, 'we are doing.'
Idíorsen, 'thou doest.'	Idíoriñiz, 'you are doing.'
Idíor, 'he is doing.'	Idíorlér, 'they are doing.'

Imperfect.

İdîrîdim, 'I was doing.'	İdîrîdîq, 'we were doing.'
İdîrîdîn, 'thou wast doing.'	İdîrîdîniiz, 'you were doing.'

OBSERVATIONS ON THE TWO PRECEDING VERBS.

The verb Ítmek, 'to do,' and the verb Olmaq, 'to make oneself or to be,' are often used as auxiliary verbs. The verb Ítmék (as well as Qílmeq), when preceded by certain Arabic or Persian substantives, performs the function of an auxiliary verb in the active verbs Khidmet-ítmék, 'to serve,' etc.

The verb Olmaq, when preceded by certain substantives, or adjectives, is conjugated with them, and is employed as an auxiliary verb in the passive or neuter verbs: as, Gheib olmaq, 'to lose oneself,' etc.

GERUND.

The others are formed as before :—Güeurüb, ‘seen, after having seen.’

So are conjugated the verbs Euldirmek, ‘to kill,’ Sipürmek, ‘to sweep.’

DIFFERENT FORMS OF ADJECTIVE-VERBS.

The verbs of the Turkish language can be combined and conjugated with an interrogative or negative particle, as well as with the verbs ‘to be able’ and ‘not to be able.’ When these are followed by an infinitive, the result of this is four forms of verbs.

When we desire to conjugate a verb interrogatively, we must add, between the participle and the substantive-verb the particle ‘mí,’ which is pronounced according to the rules of euphony (Yázíor-mí-sin).

As an exception to this rule, we have the determinate past, and the second conditional tense, and the first person of the two numbers of the subjunctive ; in these three cases, and every time that the root forms the tense by itself, the particle ‘mí’ terminates the word : as, Yázdím-mí, ‘have I written?’ İtdí-ñiz-mí, ‘have you done?’ Güeuréh-lim-mí, ‘do you wish we should see?’ Bák-séh-im-mí, ‘

The particle ‘mí’ should not be employed when the verb is already preceded by an interrogative word ; we should not therefore say, Seuilíor-mí-néh-sen, but Néh-seuilíor, ‘what is he speaking of? what does he say?’ Not

Níchün-geldik-mí, but Níchün-geldiñ, 'why didst thou come?'

When a verb is to be conjugated negatively, the letter 'm' must be added to the root, accompanied by the vowel-accent, Üstün, which is represented by 'a' in the body of the word, and at the end of the word by 'h' (final): as, Yáz-má-máq, 'not to write,' İtmám, 'I will not do.'

The same letter 'm' joined to the participle of the subjunctive, gives another form to the verb which expresses inability in the subject; thus the verb Sáımeq, 'to count'—of which the root Sáı makes Sáıméh, 'do not count'—makes in the infinitive (Sáıéh-má-méq) Güeuréh-midüm, 'I have not been able to see.'

The verbs conjugated negatively having their roots ending in 'a' or 'e,' cannot consequently be conjugated otherwise than after the first and second conjugations.

The verb 'to be able,' is rendered in Turkish by Bılmék, 'to know,' which is combined with the participle of the subjunctive which follows it: as, İdéh Bılmék, 'to be able to do,' İtshéh-bıldım, 'I have been able to reach; or, to reach I have known.'

In this form are included certain verbs which combine amongst themselves, and which are conjugated as a single verb; thus we say: Elí-Qúmaq, 'to retain,' Güeuréh Gelmek, 'to have seen.'

---------------------------------	--------------------------------------

For using the tenses of verbs in conversation, be careful to observe that—

The present of the indicative is almost always employed as a future, which nevertheless indicates no period in coming time; as, Mektúbí-yázéh-rim, 'I will write this letter, to-day, to-morrow, or even a month hence.'

The determinate imperfect is employed as the conditional in French if it is preceded by the conjunction 'if': as, Aáqlı ólsáhiñ seuzíméh f'itmád ıdir-dik, 'you would believe my word if you were wise.'

The conditional tenses reunite the verb and the conjunction 'if': as, Dıánırıséh-im, 'if I endure'; but the second conditional tense is employed as subjunctive after locutions: as, Kásh-kéh Alláh verdı dáh, 'please God that!' Káshkéh ıshinéh muqıd ólsáh iñ, 'would to God we were attentive to our business!' This same tense expresses doubt or admiration, when employed interrogatively: as, Gitschmem-dúr-séh-mem, 'I know not whether I ought to go or not.'

OF THE FORMATION OF TENSES.

The verbs composed of hard letters, or formed of hard vowels, end in the present of the infinitive with the particle 'maq,' and those composed of weak letters with 'mek.' By removing these particles one has the root of the verb, which is terminated either by a vowel, as Árá, 'seek,' Diqléh, 'listen,' Oqú, 'read,' or by a consonant, as Qír, 'break,' Sév, 'love,' Búl, 'find.' Either may be monosyllables as the first four are, or polysyllables as are the four last.

The root forms all the tenses of the verb, either by itself or by the participles, which are derived from it.

The root by itself forms four tenses:—

1st. The imperative, by the addition of the persons of the imperative of the substantive verb: as, Oqúsún, 'let him read.'

2nd. The determinate past, by the addition of the determinate imperfect of the same verb, by contraction: as, Oqúdúm, 'I have read,' etc.

3rd. The second conditional tense, by the addition of the determinate imperfect, by contraction: as, Oqú séh dáh, 'let him read.'

4th. The gerund, by the addition of the same tense of the substantive verb: as, Okúfúb yázmaq, 'reading and writing.'

The root of all verbs can be joined to the particle 'dír,' and have the signification of an active verb, except the passive verbs, which are not susceptible of this particle.

We must not, then, say Seuldirmiñ, which has no sense in Turkish.

When several characteristic letters are added to the root of a primitive verb, this verb preserves the form and the signification of the last of these letters: as, Atmáq, 'to throw,' Átdír-máq, 'to cause to throw,' Átdír-ilmáq, 'to be caused to be thrown.'

OF THE UNIPERSONAL VERBS.

The unipersonal verb is only employed in all the tenses in the third person of the singular.

In the Turkish language this verb can only be employed when preceded by its veritable subject: as, Yágh-múr yághíor, 'the rain rains, or, it rains'; Kár yághéch-jeq, 'the snow will rain, or, it will snow.'

When the subject of the verb is joined to a possessive adjective affix, the verb is often used as an accidentally unipersonal verb; thus we say, Qárinimájdír, 'my stomach is hungry, I am hungry,' Yüreqí-búláníor, 'his heart is troubled, or, he has pain in the heart,' Báshim ághríor, 'my head has pain, or, I have head-ache.'

The verbal adjectives Wár (or Vár), 'he exists,' Yoq, 'he does not exist,' combine themselves with the substantive verb Dír, and employ themselves as accidentally unipersonal verbs; but then they express an idea of possession: as, Benim wár dír, 'it exists to me, or, I have,' Seniñ yok dúr, 'it has not existed for thee! thou hast not had it!'

Besides, a possessive adjective affix must be added to the name of the object possessed, marked by these verbs; thus we say, Benim-bír sa'aetim wár, 'I have a watch,' Seniñ hích bír shéiñ yoq, 'thou hast nothing.'

Exercise.—Form the passive, the reciprocal, and the transitive of the verb Qúshémaq, ‘to run, to harness’; thus Qúshlámaq, ‘to be harnessed,’ Qúshshémaq, ‘to run mutually’ (little used), Qúsh-dír-maq, ‘to cause to run, to gallop.’

Conjugation of Accidentally Unipersonal Verbs.

Wár-dír, ‘there is,’ Yoqdúr, ‘there is not.’

 Olsáh-ihťiájĩn, 'if thou hadst need.'
 Bakhtĩ-olsáh, 'if he had the good fortune.'
 Sebeb-lérĩ-olsáh, 'if they had the motive.'

OF THE PARTICIPLE.

The participle is a word which has the nature both of the verb and of the adjective, or of the adverb.

There are two sorts of participles, the declinable participle and the indeclinable participle.

The declinable participle has the nature of the verb, in so much that it has its signification and its complement, as, Alláhĩ seván ádám, 'the God-loving man'; and of the adjective, in that it qualifies the word to which it has relation, as, Háwá-dáh üchán-qúsh-lér, 'in the air flying birds, or, birds that fly in the air.'

OF THE GERUND.

Gerunds are certain invariable participles which modify the verbs by which they are preceded: as, Wárúb gélmék, 'to go and come, i.e. to come after having been,' Idéh kizinéh-riñ suhbét, 'let us converse as we walk.'

The gerund is derived either from the root of the verbs, or from the present of the infinitive, or from a declinable or indeclinable participle, as we have seen before.

ADVERBS.

The adverb is a word which modifies a verb, as, Shú-âdam-fésîh-seuz-flér, 'that man speaks eloquently'; or an adjective, as, Mizâjî-pék latîf-vé-pék âla'a-dîr, 'his disposition is gentle and excellent'; or another adverb, as, Ma'alûm-âtî dakhî ghâîc (or gheiyét) dâh-chok-dûr, 'and his knowledge is very great.'

The qualificative adjectives are often employed as adverbs when they modify a verb: as, Yâlán-seulmék, 'to lie,' Khúsh-gêldîñiz, 'you are welcome, i.e. pleasantly came you.'

List of the Adverbs mostly used.

Shimdî, 'now.'
 Âslâ, 'never.'
 Âz, 'a little.'
 Ârtîq, 'more.'
 Uzâq, 'far.'

Démîn, 'a moment before,'
 'only a moment ago.'
 Dâímâ, 'always.'
 Zîyâdéh, 'more, too much.'
 Qâchiân, 'when.'

Adverbs of Place.

The adverbs of place can have three terminations, according to the different movements which the verbs they modify express.

The verbs can express a movement of tendency and one of return.

When the verb expresses a movement of tendency, the adverb takes a final 'h' (ð): as, Bú-râ-yâh-gel, 'come here.'

When the verb marks a movement of return, the adverb ends in 'dân': as, Gît búrá-dân, 'leave this place.'

If the verb expresses no movement, the adverb takes the particle 'd.h,' which is pronounced 'dáh' in words of the first and of the third class, and 'déh' in those of the second and fourth: as, Qál búrádéh, 'remain here, in this place.'

List of Adverbs of Place.

Qání, Qáníyá, Qándéh, Né- réhyéh, 'where?'	Ságh-déh, 'to the right.'
Néréhdéh, Néh-árádéh, Néh- yér-déh, Néh-mehel-déh, 'in which place?'	Ústündéh, or Uzréh, or Uzerindéh, 'over or above.'

	Etráfdéh, 'round about.'
	Áshághídáh, Áshághá, 'be- low, beneath.'

Degrees of Signification of the Adverbs.

Certain particles joined to an adjective or to a substantive, express the idea of diminution or modification: as,

Áz, 'little,' Áz-ájíq, 'very little,' Kúchuk, 'little,' Kúch-jík, 'very little.' Notwithstanding, however, the particles 'jighz,' 'jigiz,' (Qíz-jigiz, 'a little girl,') are frequently employed at the end of substantives: as, Ev-jíkiz-im yándí-gil-oldí, 'my little house was burnt and reduced to ashes.'

The particle 'jéh' joined to the end of an adjective, or of another adverb, marks the degree of mediocrity: as, Yessí, 'flattened,' Yessí-jéh, 'slightly flattened.'

Dáhá, 'again, more,' followed by an adjective, marks a comparison: as, Bú chojúq sen-dán dáhá á'aklí dír, 'this child is wiser than thee.'

Wáí báshün, 'woe be to you! (or, rather, 'to your head!')	Sáqin, 'take care.'

Gentile adverbs are formed from the names of countries or nations, by adding 'jéh' 'chéh,' or 'injéh'; as from Nemchéh, 'Germany,' is formed Nemchéhjéh, 'after the German manner,' ('Germanice'); from Türk is formed Türkchéh, 'à laTurque'; so Osmánlí a'adetinjéh, 'according to the Ottoman custom.'

PREPOSITIONS.

The preposition is an invariable word which serves to express the relations the words have amongst themselves.

In the Turkish tongue, each preposition can express but one relation, but the same relation can be expressed by different prepositions.

The prepositions are affixed, or isolated.

The affix-prepositions are only used when joined to an adverb, or to a substantive, in the nominative case: as, Ashághí-déh, 'below,' Insán-în, 'of the man.'

The isolated prepositions always come immediately after their complement; and each of them governs this case according to the relation it expresses.

The affix-prepositions are :—

Relative to attributes.—'ñ,' 'of, belonging to': as, Kíshí-niñ, 'of the person.'

Relation of tendency, or of the place one is going to.—'H' (final), 'towards': as, Bázáreh, 'to the market,' Gemmí-yéh, 'to the ship.'

Relation of return, or of the place whence one comes.—Dan, ‘from’: as, Chádir-dan, ‘from the tent,’ Deñiz-dan, ‘from the sea.’

Relation of the place where one is.—Dáh, ‘in’: as, Jeng-dáh, ‘in the war,’ Úrdú-dáh, ‘in the camp.’

Relation of union.—Jeh, ‘according, in the manner of,’ as, Fránsiz-jéh, ‘in French,’ Inglís-jéh, ‘in English’; Jelín, ‘as’: as, Ben-jelín, ‘as we.’

Relation of separation.—Siz, ‘without, with the exception of’: as, Nizám-siz, ‘without order,’ Sis-siz, ‘without noise.’

The isolated prepositions which require their complement in the nominative, are:—Íléh, ‘with,’ Dost-íniz-íléh, ‘with your friend,’ Úzréh, ‘according,’ Bu-minvál-üzréh, ‘according to this form,’ Ichün, ‘for,’ Khátir-niz-íchün, ‘for your satisfaction,’ Gibí, ‘as, or like,’ Yapráq gibí, ‘like a leaf,’ Áshúrá, ‘beyond,’ Deñiz áshúrá, ‘beyond the sea.’

The prepositions require the genitive when they have a personal pronoun or a demonstrative pronoun for complement: as, Benim-íchün, ‘for me,’ Sen-in-íléh, ‘with thee.’

Those which require their complement in the dative, are:—Doghrú, ‘towards,’ Qísí-yéh-doghrú, ‘towards the shore.’ Yaqín, ‘near,’ Bizéh-yaqín, ‘near us.’

Those which require their complement in the ablative, are:—Evvel, ‘before,’ Bir-áf-dán-evvel, ‘a month before.’ Otáh, ‘beyond,’ Keuí-dan-otáh, ‘beyond the village.’ Birú, ‘on this side,’ Búrún-dán-birú, ‘on this side of the Cape.’

The adverbs of place, and the words which express distances and situations of places, end in ‘h’ (final). ‘Dáh,’ ‘dán,’ are often used as prepositive locutions; but then, in order to bring these locutions in relation to their complement, we add, between the preposition-affix and the last letter of the word, a possessive-adjective-affix, according to the person represented by the complement of these prepositions: as, Átráf, 'around,' Átráf-dah, 'in the neighbourhood,' Bághjéh-niñ-átráf-dáh, 'round the garden.'

Prepositive Locutions most in use.

Áltinéh, 'under, beneath.' Íchínéh, 'in, within.'

CONJUNCTIONS.

The conjunction is an invariable word which serves to join sentences, or parts of sentences, together.

List of Conjunctions most in use.

Chún-kih , 'since, for.'	Zéh , 'nor.'
İmdí , 'now, then.'	Dáh , 'also.'
Lákın , 'but.'	Dakhí , 'do.'
İsá, yákhşúd , 'or,' or, 'or well.'	Anjám, nihaí-et , 'at last.'

The copulative conjunctions, Hem, 'and,' Gerek, 'let it be,' and Neh, 'not,' with negations should repeat themselves before the words which they join: as, Hem yér, hem íchér, 'he eats and he drinks,' Neh-yér, neh íchér, 'he neither eats nor drinks.'

INTERJECTIONS.

The interjection is an invariable word which serves to express the lively or excited feelings of the soul.

The principal interjections are :—

Alláh, Alláh! ‘God, God!’ to show surprise.

Ah! or isváh! ‘alas!’

Néh-ísazıq, yáziq-lér-olsún, ‘what a pity!’

Sús, Sús-ol, ‘be silent.’

RECAPITULATION.

The euphony of the language generally used consists :—

1st. In not confounding the senses of the different classes.

2nd. When one is obliged to add a syllable to any word, only to use the respective vowels of its class.

3rd. To avoid the ‘hiatus’ between the two sounds by means of an ‘euphonic’ letter.

The genius of the Turkish language requires that a single word expressing the idea of plurality should suffice to put every word of the sentence in the plural. It is not then a vicious pleonasm to say, İkí heiván-ler-téjî-vé-mukhátiréh-lér; but as the number expresses the idea of plurality, it was necessary to leave the words which depend on it invariable, and to say, İkí-yér-téjî-vé mukhátiréh lí heiván, ‘two ferocious and dangerous animals,’ literally, two ferocious and dangerous ANIMAL.

One substantive can complete the sense commenced by another substantive which precedes it. When we say, ‘the love of virtue,' 'of virtue' completes the idea commenced by 'love'; in the Turkish language, the proposition must be begun by the complement, and, to bring these two words in relation to each other, the possessive adjective 'his' must be added, and one must say, 'of virtue, his love.'

The characteristic letters which form the case of a declension, the possessive-affix-adjectives, the terminations of the substantive verb, and the affix-prepositions, ought always to agree in euphony with the words to which they are joined: as, Yıldızlér-éh, 'to the stars,' Qúrch-dán, 'from the earth,' Deñiz-dán, 'from the sea,' Düşmen-ñiz, 'your enemy.'

The adjectives, the direct or indirect regimens of verbs—in a word, every word which qualifies or determines the sense of another—must always go before it; therefore all the propositions are terminated by their verb in a personal mood.

OF ORTHOGRAPHY.

Orthography is the art of writing the words of a language according to the aim of its writers or authors.

The orthography of the words of the usual language is only an orthography of usage; and consists in adding or taking away letters in order to facilitate or modify the pronunciation of words. The application of this principle will be facilitated by the following rules:—

First Rule.—In conformity with the pronunciation of the words, the 'vowel-accents' should be represented by one of the letters 'y' (or 'í'), 'h' (final), 'v,' or 'w' (Waw),

‘a’ (or Alif), when many consonants come together in a word; we must then write with an ‘a,’ Básmáq, ‘to trample on’; with a ‘y’ (or ‘í’), Tárlméq, ‘to become angry’; with a ‘v’ or ‘w,’ Súrmeq, ‘to labour’; and not Sirmek, Tárlmeq.

The Üstün (vowel-accent) is represented by ‘a’ or Alif, and at the end of words by the final ‘h’; nevertheless this letter is considered as final even when followed by a characteristic particle: as, Áarbéh-lér, ‘the carriages, or carts,’ Áléh-ím, ‘that I buy.’

The Üsréh is represented by ‘y,’ as, Derí, ‘living,’ and the Ütürü by ‘v’ or ‘w,’ as, Ozún, ‘long.’

Second Rule.—The vowel-accent should be represented by one of the letters ‘y’ (or ‘í’), ‘h’ (final), ‘v’ or ‘w’ (Waw), ‘a’ (or Alif), when this word is affected by the different ‘vowel-accent’; thus, we write, Qárí, ‘woman,’ Chobán, ‘shepherd,’ Topál, ‘lame.’

Third Rule.—The consonant-vowels, one of which ends a word whilst the other begins another word, must be suppressed. These two words must be joined together; by elision, one writes Noldí? ‘what has become of him?’ Nasl, ‘how,’ Oghlíléh, ‘with his son,’ Níchüü, ‘why?’ which take the place of Néh-oldí, Néh-ásal, Oghlú-fléh, etc.

Fourth Rule.—All letters of a word should be joined together, except ‘h’ (final), ‘v’ or ‘w,’ ‘z,’ ‘r,’ ‘z,’ ‘d,’ and ‘a’ (Alif), which ought never to be joined to the letters which follow them.

The affix ‘y’ or ‘í,’ takes another ‘y’ after the letters above mentioned.

The characteristics of the dative and of the accusative ought not to be joined to the word which ends in ‘y.’

The accompanying dialogues are freely translated, with due acknowledgment, from the rare and valuable work of the old French Jesuit, Viguier, printed in Constantinople, in the printing office of the French Embassy, A.D. 1790; and although representing Turkey as it was at that period, and on very many points, thoroughly applicable to the present time. (Perhaps such tricks would rather now be attributed to Greeks, Armenians, Maltese, and Levantines in general, than to men of the stamp of Mehemmed Chêlêbî.)

The scene is Constantinople, and it is supposed that a Jew-broker and an A'ûtâr (or 'grocer-druggist') league themselves together to deceive a Frank merchant, who has only recently arrived and has no previous knowledge of the capital, although he speaks the language; they succeed in their knavish plot, only paying a very moderate amount on account of a large purchase, and obliging their creditor to remain satisfied for the remainder due with their mere verbal promises, which they subsequently impuently repudiated, both at the inferior tribunal of the Mehkeméh of Galatáh, and in the presence of the Vizir and of the Chief Judge of Civil Causes. The druggist, urged on by the perfidious insinuations of the Jew, has recourse to the grossest chicanery, and to the support of false witnesses, to avoid, at least, the entire payment of the sum due.

The thread of this intrigue, planned by the most signal roguery, and the dénouement of this comic piece, lead the reader to where such bad pieces of business would still lead, as of old, in the first city of the Ottoman Empire, but for the extension of the capitulations with the powers of Europe, and the increased powers of Foreign Ministers and Consuls.
